Always Add Value This is hard to remember, but your YouTube videos are not about you. They're about your audience. When creating any type of content on social media, it's best practice to always consider the value proposition for the audience. Is the information you are providing truly valuable? Will people want to watch?

Create A Content Plan A good way to make sure you're always adding value is to have a content plan. This can be as simple as an excel file or Google sheet. Start with ideas that you brainstorm yourself. Remember that you're the expert and you have a lot of valuable knowledge to share. Make a list of those ideas. Then assign completion dates to each.

Be Consistent

Consistency is key on YouTube.

From creating consistent thumbnails to uploading new videos on a consistent schedule, people like digital content they can count on.

And while there is no set number of videos you should post per month, set a goal for yourself.

One good example of consistency is educational YouTube channel, The Urban Veg. With branded video thumbnails and curated playlists of similar videos, The Urban Veg uses consistency to teach beginners how to cook plant-based meals.
