Share Your Videos With Your Network

For some of us, this may be the most difficult part. Sharing your YouTube videos with your network could be intimidating, as you risk potential humiliation and online heckling.

But to have a successful eLearning YouTube channel, you truly have to stop caring what others think. You have to be bold. Take the risk. Share the video. Brush off any negative comments thrown your way and move forward.

Sharing with your network is the best way to kickstart your YouTube channel and show your biggest fans the new direction you're taking.

Realize that it's ok if you're not an expert video creator right away. No one is an expert when they first start off. Just keep putting in the weekly work to make new videos, and your videos will get better and better with each upload.
